Queerness, Latinx Identities, and Religion: Charting New Research Courses

Convened by
Ismael Ruiz and Daniel Ballon-Garst

28 April 2023
2-3pm
Fox Center for Humanistic Inquiry

This conversation will explore past and future trajectories for research at the intersection of Latinx and Queer identities in the study of religion. The main two questions we will discuss are: 1) Where can we draw from historically, methodologically, theoretically, and theologically to understand the intersection of Latinx and Queer identities? And 2) what should future research in the study of religion consider to better understand this intersection? Ruiz and Ballon-Garst do research primarily within Christian traditions, but conversations and insights about any and all religious and spiritual traditions are welcome. The goal of this dialogue is to collectively chart new directions for the study of queerness, sexuality, gender, and embodiment in Latinx Religious and Theological Studies.

Part of a series of seminars by the title “Religion Matters” co-sponsored by the Fox Center for Humanistic Inquiry and the Department of Religion at Emory.
